If it's not one thing, it's another. Just when it seems the economy is starting to grow again, gas prices are skyrocketing.

But RVers are a hardy group and they know a secret: Even with soaring pump prices, loading the family into the rig and heading into to the great outdoors is not just a fun vacation, it's an affordable one. RV vacations are, on average, 27 to 61% less expensive than other vacations.

That's why we weren't surprised that our friends over at the RVIA found that most of you plan to take more weekend trips closer to home this spring and summer to offset rising gas prices. The RVIA's April Campfire Canvass of RV owners reveals that more than half intend to use their RV more this spring and summer despite fuel prices. Of those who will use them more, 65% said one reason is to take more mini-vacations. You can take a look at the whole survey right here.

It looks like its going to be a busy summer of RVing, so swing by our 19th Annual Northern California Spring RV Show and Sale and pick up a host of new or used RV accessories to spruce up the rig for the travel season--or even get a whole new ride if the mood strikes you!

Over the years, we've highlighted dozens of places where you can take the family on a great RV vacation. If you are looking for a fun weekend getaway, take a look at our newsletter archive for some ideas. Here's another tip: Check out www.OvernightRVParking.com. It's the Internet's largest, most complete database listing free or very inexpensive places to park your RV.

Have fun out there, and I'll definitely see you at the show at the Alameda County Fairgrounds May 13-22!

Happy RVing!
